My Unique Present
My grandpa's birthday was just around the corner. I came up with the idea to draw pictures of people doing sports on a card as my grandpa had always been an active sports lover. From basketball to ping-pong, swimming to diving, volleyball to soccer, there wasn't a sport he didn't like.

The next day, I gathered my pens and markers and began to draw. For basketball, I drew a basketball sailing through the net of a hoop. Nearby, someone was swimming freestyle majestically. Then, I painted a volleyball soaring over a net in a curve and someone jumping off a springboard in a straight line. In front of this scene, a soccer ball was bouncing into the net while a ping-pong ball and racket lay there, ready to be used. At the end of the card, I crafted red paper lanterns as red symbolizes good luck and health in China.

When my grandpa's birthday finally arrived, I surprised him with my card, and he was overjoyed with my creative work. I was so happy that he liked my present. I thought it was the best idea ever.
