"Woo hoo" shouted Bea Francis as she rode on Nimrod her black Hannoveraner in the Hunter Valley park when suddenly her big idea struck for the inventions fair of Timberly Worthy. She had spent 1 month thinking about what she should invent for her competition and was so happy that she started to get really excited. Now you're probably wanting to know what Bea's idea was. Her idea was that she should make a bridle that shows what the horse is saying on the reins. Bea thought that it was exceptional and perfect. So she rode home and started straight away. The invention was very easy so it only took her 1 hour.
