Write a short story about your best idea ever.

My best idea ever

Then it hit me. The best idea ever.

I was only five so don't judge me on this. I was in class thinking about an invention to write about in my story, when it hit me.

When I was older, I would become an engineer and build a keuss that could turn into a boat and a plane. It was probably mostly out of my imagination but as a five year old, I also believed in fairies and unicorns. I began drawing out what it would look like. As a younger child than I am now, my drawings weren't the best but I was still very proud of them.

Utensils required: A pencil, a pencil sharpener, a hundred pieces of paper, one big imagination

I started thinking about what it would look like before my pencil hit the paper. I drew and drew wherever I had a second to spare. While my five year old mind wasn't as clear on the difference between reality and imagination, this was my best idea.
