"A Riddle a day keeps the dullness away"

I planted my virtual seed in rich soil. It was my best idea that started to grow. School was exhausting with all our work and sheets piled on a table. I really needed some quality time to relax. It was then when I got a sprinkle of inspiration from my mother and asked her to write a riddle. I took it to school and my peers disorderly gathered around. I read in a hushed voice the riddle that was in the book. Everyone deeply thought as silence remained.

I felt a lot more brisk when I was close to getting the answer. My virtual seed sprouted into a tiny plant. I stuttered then clearly said the answer. My friends looked around amazed. From that day onwards I was a lot more stronger in logic.

On the second day, my virtual plant grew some leaves as the chlorophyll shone brightly. My teacher crouched down and tried answering the riddle with my friends. She asked me for a hint but instead I winked.

The answer was at the tip of her tongue. She said the answer calmly but unsure. This idea was a great way to sharpen the tip of our brains. My virtual plant was now half way to becoming a tree. This riddle game at break was a way to socialise with my classmates.

The next day was the hardest riddle ever. I felt numb and cold like an ice cube. The whole grade and teachers gathered around to see the riddle. My virtual plant was now a full, grown up tree.

The end of break bell rang, but everyone stayed eager to find out the answer. We thought really hard and came to a unanimous agreement.

Everyone shivered hoping the answer was right. I checked at the back of my book. The answer was correct! We cheered and congratulated each other.

From that day on, my tree grew more leaves as everyone started to bring their own riddles. Breaks were so much fun. Warm smiles wiped across every person's face. Only now we were a community.
