Illusion down Memory

Road

As the sun sized down, the moon rose up. It was the day before my dad would pass away. My mum and I entered the room with my dad coughing and struggling to breathe. He turned to the little table next to him and held a dusty ancient book and blew the dust off the front cover. He then asked me to come over next to him, he then gave me the book and whispered in my ear, "Open this book whenever you want to see me again". After we spent some time with my dad we said our last goodbyes and drove home.

Ever since my dad died it hasn't been the same. Never going out for dinner, my mum staying in her room most of the time crying, and me now having to make dinner for my mum and I. I really wish I could see my dad again. Then a lightbulb sparked in my mind, the dusty book in the corner of my room gathering even more dust. I tried picking up the book but then it slipped out of my hand and made a gigantic bang. My mum then screamed out "WHAT ARE YOU DOING IN THERE!" I raised my voice and replied back "Sorry!" I put it on the bed and then opened it. My vision turned black. My eyes were starting to open, I was in a gallery full of photos and videos of old memories on the wall. I walk up to an old video of myself spilling slime on my dad. I get sucked into the video and the video starts playing. I couldn't hold my laughter, it was like magic. I pressed the exit button on the wall, and fell back on my bed. I then sprinted to my mum's room to tell her the great news. I excitedly told my mum "MUM! MUM! This book shows memories of us with DAD!" My mum replies "Ok, show me"

Celine and her mum opened up the book together and was in the gallery. Celine's mum couldn't believe it, Celine and her mum ran through all the memories of them with her dad. Celine and her mum now both go out for dinner, relax, eat together and spend time with her dad in the books.
