Reading is magic and can transport you to amazing and curious places.

Write a short story about a wonderful and magical place.

Most people when they think about the word "magical" they think of a magical rainbow land with unicorns everywhere, but I think of the library. You see, if you're in a friend group like mine, that has A LOT of drama, the library is a place to come and relax, like taking a vacation. There are THOUSANDS of shelves with MILLIONS of books waiting to be read. Every single one of those books a story someone took months to make, walking into a library is like entering a video game, and every one of those books, a path with a problem YOU have to solve. It could be a crime story and you're the detective, or a scientist needs help with a project. Whatever book you read, you enter a new story, with a different problem. Most people like picture books, so they have an idea of what's happening but I like chapter books more, so I can make up my own version of them based off their characteristics and personality. So that's why I like this year's book week theme, because reading truly is magic.
